練習 1:

Charlotte was a journalist. One day she received a call from someone claiming to be an Amazon representative. He said her account showed suspicious purchases worth $88,000. When Charlotte denied them, she was transferred to a supposed FTC agent. This agent told her identity thieves had opened 22 bank accounts, registered vehicles and properties in her name, and wired millions overseas. He warned that drug traffickers were involved and that arrest warrants had been issued against her.

練習 2:

Terrified, Charlotte was then connected to a man claiming to be from the CIA. He explained that her assets would be frozen for a year and advised her to withdraw $50,000 to live on. Charlotte went to the bank, withdrew the money, and placed it in a shoebox. Later, a car arrived, and she handed the cash to the supposed CIA agent, who promised to exchange it for a government check.

練習 3:

After five hours on the phone, Charlotte believed the ordeal was over. But when she tried to follow up, she realized the entire chain of calls—from Amazon to the FTC to the CIA—had been a scam. The fraudsters used spoofed numbers, fake badges, and staged documents to trick her.

She reported the case to the real FTC and FBI, but it was unlikely she would recover her money.
